Thesis Structure - research

- Basically similar to a scientific paper
- Except – you have more space and write more (usually) than a paper
- Organize a thesis into chapters
- Chapters
 - Chapter 1: Introduction
 - Chapter 2: Literature review (Related work in a paper)
 - Chapter 3: Proposed approach
 - Chapter 4: Evaluation
 - Chapter 5: Results and Discussions
 - Chapter 6: Conclusions
 - References

Thesis Structure - research

- Chapter 1: Introduction

- The content is similar to a paper
- But, instead of writing 1 page/500-1000 words, you should write at least 1000 words
- Where should you extend? Every content, especially focusing on

 - You can name it “Background and literature review”
 - You should have sections with each focusing on one area or research direction (addressing the same problem as yours)
 - In a paper, you write one sentence for each paper, max.
 - In a thesis, you can write more
 - You can compare and contrast studies. Tables summarizing may help.

Thesis Structure - research

- Chapter 3: Proposed approach
 - This chapter is similar to that of a paper
 - You can detail concepts, models, etc. that you use for your proposed approach
 - Make sure you differentiate what you propose vs what is in the background

Thesis Structure - research

- Chapter x: Conclusions
 - Summarize the objective, method
 - Summarize the results
 - Offer implications for the study
 - Limitations
 - Future work

Thesis Structure – App development report

- Report what you have done and produced

 - Chapter 3: Proposed application, or include your app's name in the title
 - Ideas, analysis, design, architecture
 - Chapter 4: Implementation
 - Chapter 5: Results and Discussions
 - Chapter 6: Conclusions
 - References

General guidelines

- Each chapter should include a short summary at the beginning
